following review helpful. Great author, Same story!By Cougar6If you want a career in flying: (1) join the military (if able). (2) Get your ratings on your own most importantly your CFI as a backup plan. (3) Major in a non-aviation degree program, get established and put away money toward your flight training. These are the lessons of a military guy who has learned the hardway! There is a great deal of networking that will always accompany your aviation career, however a structured plane is your best bet!0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Very interesting productBy G. ArnaultI am very happy with this product which exactly match with the description I had read before purchasing. The waiting period was the one announced on the website. Very nice :)

Finding the right job in aviation requires skills they don't teach you in flight school. In this useful and informative guide, Greg Brown shares his insights about meeting the right people and making the right impression, thus allowing you to take control of your career and increase your rate of climb professionally. Updated and revised, This second edition provides readers with the necessary methods for successful networking in aviation. Included are useful tactics for optimizing relationships with aviation colleagues and friends and a discussion of the promise and pitfalls of job hunting via the internet. Other features include: planning your pilot career, developing career contacts, resumes, cover letters, and applications, gaining interview confidence, advice for college and flight school students, advice for new professional pilots, and advice for transitioning military aviators.

"The definitive book for getting ahead in this business." --Capt. O. J. Alexander, pilot interviewer for a major airline
"Well written, creative and accurate...There's a lot of meat in those few pages." --Dr. Charles Ahlstrand, director of the Career Center at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University-Prescott, Arizona
"So, I put out my ten resumes and waited, and waited, and waited...I had never read any books that explain just how important networking is in getting an airline job, let alone how to go about it." --Darius W. Johnson, commuter captain

About the Author
Greg Brown has long wandered the skies of North America with family and friends. His love of flying is apparent to anyone who reads his "Flying Carpet" column in AOPA Flight Training magazine, or his stories in AOPA Pilot and other publications. An aviator since 1972, Greg was 2000 National Flight Instructor of the Year, winner of the 1999 NATA Excellence in Pilot Training Award, and the first NAFI Master Flight Instructor. He holds an airline transport pilot certificate with Boeing 737 type rating, and flight instructor certificate with all fixed-wing aircraft ratings. He has found jobs in corporate, scheduled, and business aviation, and in flight training. Other books by Greg Brown include Flying Carpet, The Turbine Pilot's Flight Manual, The Savvy Flight Instructor, and You Can Fly!
