Dr. Marinus de Waal, Dutch scholar and professor of Comparative Religion, was also well-known for his interest in herbs-- much of his research in herbology forms the basis of what we know today about herbs. In searching for the basis of this knowledge, Marinus de Waal takes on an herbal exploration through the Bible, showing us how the herbs and ancient methods of healing are still in practice today. The author discusses the role of the physician and apothecary in biblical Hebrew society. He cites the biblical references for the herbs used for various illnesses and disorders, along with the outward appearance, medicinal working and methods of use for each plant.
